We would like to have "Brother Ben" compare the farmers' party, as he would like to have us regard the republican party, with the attitude of Senator Harding, the spokesman of the senate for special interests, and Harding, the republican presidential candidate. Harding can save the farmer now in an effort to obtain the farmer vote, but can he explain his record, which shows him plainly opposed to measures to help the farmers while he continued to faithfully defend the special interests?

During the war, Senator Harding said, "I venture to say that if the corporations of this country were holding back food products for advance prices, as does the American farmer, there would be an outcry from one end of this country to the other."

Senator Harding opposed the big increase in the price of wheat. Speaking against guarantees for the grain, he said, "I said that raising one dollar wheat was a profitable occupation in time of peace; and I say to the senator from North Dakota that the knowing farmers of the country are buying land in Ohio at $150 an acre for the very purpose of going into the commercial proposition of raising wheat profitably at $1 per bushel."

Discussing government control of industries necessary to the prosecution of war, Mr. Harding said: "If these larger concerns did not submit—they submitted with good grace in most instances—we have given authority to seize their plants and operate them under government direction. I want it clear that I have been in full accord with this grant of governmental power. Up to date, I have heard none threaten to quit their productive operations, while it is fair to say in contrast, on the other hand, that thousands of representatives of the great common people in various ranks have said, 'We are not patriotic enough to respond unless you grant us a certain compensation.' It is not practicable to commandeer the farms, and the agricultural voting strength forbids a drastic course like that which is applied to the manufacturing industries."

try. That is the truth about it, however unpopular it may be to say it, and so we legislate a minimum price on wheat, double the normal rate, while we are seeking to put the maximum price on the product of American industrial institutions, and hold it much below the normal conditions of a very live war market."

Senator Harding opposed passage of the farm loan bill. The following remarks were made by Senator Harding on the floor of the United States senate (See Congressional Record, April 26, 1916, pages 6849 et seq.): "I may say for myself before entering upon the reading that I am not opposed to a practical measure which does not go too far in fixing upon the government a function that is patently socialistic. I am trying to learn from members of this body the real reason, however, for a pressing measure of this kind. I will not assume to say that conditions in Ohio are altogether like those of other states in the union, but I believe I state an absolute truth when I say that there is no more need for a measure of this kind for the agriculturists or the state of Ohio than for the government to step in and take charge of all our industrial and productive affairs of that state. I only speak of this in passing. To those of us in Ohio there seems to be no occasion for the passage of such a measure."

Would the farmer, or anyone, for that matter, voting for Harding for president ever exactly know where he stood and exactly what to expect if Harding is elected? Refer to his record. If nothing is ambiguous in the republican party's pledges, either to the farmer or to capital and labor we refer you to Samuel Gompers in the American Federationist, July, 1920, who says: "The republican party, in its platform declarations and through the political character of the candidates nominated, has taken a position as an unqualified defender of the enemies of labor. It has declared for the enslavement of the workers and for an open field to profiteers and to those who seek to suppress the aspirations of the great masses of our people."

In behalf of capital we have little to say. Perhaps the most significant omission from the republican platform is in respect to the excessive use of money in federal elections. To avert nation-wide scandal, the republicans at Chicago rejected both General Wood and Governor Lowden, whose supporters had made such reckless use of money in the primaries and conventions as to make either of them susceptible to attack if nominated. If there is anything significant in "slush fund" contributions of the moneyed interests, it appears capital is well able to defend itself.

A WANDER SONG.

I want to make a getaway
From trouble and from fret away;
I want to go to—somewhere,
For it's glum where
I am now.

With landlord's avariciousness,
And labor's fool capriciousness
I'm getting much disgusted;
And I'm busted,
Anyhow.

Seems like I cannot bear it all,
So take me anywhere at all
Away from life that's seamy
To a dreamy
Tropic spot,
Where food that fills and nourishes
Upon the bushes flourishes
Where a tree sufficient tent is
And the rent is Quite forgot.

I know that I should love it all
Where strikes aren't hinted of at all.
(I'm sure no man would ever
Strike who never Worked a bit)
Amid the woes which weary us
It seems a dream delicious,
A place I'll never hike to,
But I like to Think of it!

Drill For Oil In
Box Butte County

A company of men under the management of C. O. Davenport, for many years with the Union Oil Co. of California, have secured leases on lands west of Alliance and will put down a deep test well for oil and gas.

We have been investigating this field for some time and several geologists agree that oil sands should be reached at about 2,500 feet.

WE HAVE NO STOCK FOR SALE

It is a well known fact that oil has been and is being found WEST of us in Wyoming—NORTH in South Dakota—and SOUTH in Kansas—

WHY NOT IN NEBRASKA?

Think what it will mean to Alliance if we can find oil or natural gas.

IT'S HERE—LET'S FIND IT

For the people of this community who are willing to take a chance with us, we have reserved offset leases—that is directly around the tract upon which this well is to be drilled.
